Competence Framework

University education can't focus exclusively on subject knowledge; over a lifetime, university graduates' profit at least as much from their general academic competencies acquired at university?

Competence Framework

What does that mean for education at my university?

Kharazin Univ-
problems to add soft and transversal skills due to standardised policy on curricula. It's limited to certain study programmes and subjects.
Microcredentials - competence based courses exist

South-West - In the area of options subject, elected courses are provided across faculties. There is a Career centre that provides competency-focused courses for students

Tetova uni - Also national framework of defined competencies, to these some other can be added and offered to concrete study programmes. E.G critical thinking, communication and problem-solving skills

Life-long learning as an approach

A project-based approach to adding competencies: e.g E+ project 'European regionalism and self-governance project'

Competence framework

What would be need to support academic teachers in this?

Competence Framework

University teachers feel confident about their expertise in their own subject – much less confident about helping students develop general competencies?
